Ornithine decarboxylase activity: comparison of proliferating B and T cells. The regulation of ODC activity in murine and human B and T cells was investigated. When cultured in medium containing 12.5 microM putrescine (put), ODC activity was markedly increased in activated B cells but was not significantly different from baseline in T cells. When putrescine was removed from the medium, however, ODC activity in both T and B cells decreased and approached baseline. ODC activity, when expressed per milligram DNA, was similar in T and B cells. Thus, in contrast to B cells, putrescine does not appear to be a component of the growth factor stimulatory signal that is required for ODC activation in activated T cells. Furthermore, while proliferating B cells express more ODC mRNA and protein than resting B cells, the numbers of the protein and mRNA are similar in resting and activated T cells.We use cookies to customise content for your subscription and for analytics.If you continue to browse Lexology, we will assume that you are happy to receive all our cookies. The results are similar to each other and to a recent opinion of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in New York, which upheld New York's whistleblower statute. Ohio Ohio has adopted an amendment to its whistleblower statute that is nearly identical to that of New York, and also nearly identical to that of Pennsylvania. Ohio's amendment requires that a claimant be a "current employee" (a requirement not in the New York statute) and that his communication be an "oral or written report" (a requirement in Pennsylvania, but not in New York). Similar to New York, the Ohio statute protects both employees and citizens. Ohio's statute provides an effective remedy if the employer retaliates against a claimant, and the remedies are adequate to redress the harm. The law creates a qualified right to recover losses caused by a retaliatory act even if no "employer-employee relationship" exists. Ohio's statute further provides that a jury trial is available to resolve cases in which the retaliation claim arises under the Act. Pennsylvania Pennsylvania's statute protects both employees and citizens. The statute protects "an employee who alleges retaliation by his employer because
