What's new:

The Claw Crane Company of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, United States, was a builder of large and odd-shaped cranes for hoisting and lowering heavy loads. It was founded in 1899 by Joseph Crane. Claw cranes are unique for their red-brick casings and for having significant articulation in the architecture to compensate for dynamics of the load. They tend to be heavier and larger than other cranes, with 16 ton and 25 ton models planned. A study in the Netherlands found that the high-torque capacity, because of the cranes articulation, can be an advantage in freight and long-distance hauling. Their quality was highly regarded throughout the trade and they were quickly used on skyscrapers, which allowed them to test a large mix of fundamental industrial engineering principles, such as the effect of mass and mass distribution, on crane design. By 1901 alone, the company had constructed a roll tower, a swing tower, and a ring tower. In 1893 Joseph R. Crane began selling materials, mostly used steel, from his company's shop. The name Claw grew out of a humorous incident in which the crane fell down while workers were building a homemade jig to hang an engine. It took three days to build the cranes, in which it was found that the claw was 542 times stronger than a human hand. The Pawtucket News columnist, on 10 September 1911, wrote: A Lumbering Company The industrial principle was applied to the construction of cranes for the lumber trade, notably when visitors could join in on their assembly. Origin On 21 December 1882, Joseph Crane, living in Pawtucket, Rhode Island, was nearly crushed by a large stack of railroad ties. One of the large metal hooks on his jacket caught on a speed bag kept around for heavy lifting. The impact was so powerful that Crane was killed instantly. Crane's widow, Julia, hired men from the downtown workshops, including a pillar for her son Joseph and carpentry shop employee William Cheever to build the first crane. In this form, the first crane was given the nickname 'Giblets' and sold for $100. The invention was featured in a Boston newspaper, and General Henry Howard of Blackstone, MA, ordered four of them. Howard is believed to have seen it on television, and ordered 32 cranes in advance. Production As demand grew, Claw built a workshop to scale up

Show more Show lessThe next time you order in from Pizza Hut, you may get a little surprise delivered to your home: a bag of human hair. And as the International Business Times reports, Pizza Hut isn't alone. According to a lawsuit, one company has been supplying hair to its restaurant chains since the late 1960s. Although he won't confirm it just yet, the alleged hair trader admitted to the lawsuit that the hair he's been supplying his customers is from "human sources." Of course, you'll know he's kidding around if he says, "We're always experimenting with new strains of hair to perfect our pizza dough." But if he says, "We make great dough out of hair and it's really good with cheese," you might want to think twice. The suit—filed on behalf of a customer who received a delivery of hair—could be interpreted as a minor rebellion against the "flavor revolution." Of course, hair is that old thing—it might even have been the thing that helped start the pizza revolution. As it turns out, the first pizza was probably inspired by a recipe for Italian rabbit casserole. According to Pillsbury.com, the first pizza restaurant opened in 1889 in Rome, where it's still a pizza must-try for this year's World Pizza Day. For those who are in the mood for a fine meal and fine hair, Pizza Hut offers its customers a strand of
