Justin Trudeau is also expected to face significant challenges with his plan to re-energize Canadian diplomacy, including the attempt to forge a new relationship with China. Trudeau, who returned to Canada from India on Friday evening after meeting with Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, will head to the United States within the next few weeks for his first official visit since taking power last year. While in India, Trudeau's priorities included expanding trade between India and Canada, and addressing last year's tensions caused by the extradition of drug lord drug lord Devinder "Desh" Beharry to Canada. On the trade front, Canada is attempting to build on the pre-2012 Free Trade Agreement (FTA) with India by offering a better deal. Rajan Matthan, who has served as Canada's ambassador to India since 2013, told Al Jazeera that talks over the new deal will be complicated. "It will involve tariff concessions, hopefully," he said. "And I don't think we can compare it to the old Free Trade Agreement. For example, we have a greater duty-free preference on vehicles. We've got a lot of the sectors that we'd like to see open up to trade. And we've also got a greater focus on building a business environment. So it's really looking at the regulatory side, at the investment side, at the financial services side." The prime minister's visit to Washington will follow close behind, in early April. It will be Trudeau's first trip to the United States as head of a Canadian government. The trip will mark the beginning of a new relationship between the US and Canada, one that is expected to be far more friendly than that between Washington and Ottawa during the decades of the Cold War.
